The Berlin Institute for Integration and Migration Research is a transdisciplinary research institute at the Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin.

Our aim is to research the dynamics of migration, integration, in- and exclusion processes within “postmigrant societies” whereby the analytical perspective goes beyond the “migrant” perspective and encompasses the whole society. By linking empirical research with theories of migration and integration we hope to enable a critical reflection of already established discourses on the themes of immigration, belonging, discrimination and racism.

The following research fields are empirically analyzed and critically reflected at the BIM: sports, health, education, labour market, politics and policies, civil society and lifestyles. These research themes build the core to our six departments which bring together knowledge and expertise from different (research) institutes in Berlin and mix different methods and theories from social, cultural and educational sciences thus guaranteeing a transdisciplinary approach.

At the BIM we aim at transferring our knowledge and expertise from a scientific platform to a wider audience in policy, media and civil society.

The BIM is sponsored and supported by the Hertie Foundation (sponsor), the Deutscher Fussball-Bund (sponsor), The Federal Employment Agency (supporting partner) as well as the Federal Government Commissioner for Migration, Refugees and Integration (supporting partner).
